

In the first example, you are given clues about the relationship between the length and width of a rectangle, but you aren't given either value. To assign a value, think: "Which measure do I know the least about?" The clue describes the length. You don't have any clues about the width. Represent the width as a variable.

The width is 4 inches.

The radius is 2 feet.

 Related Questions:
Practice questions taken related to this topic